"This Is Country: Photographs from Country Music, A Ken Burns Film"

Our film tells the history of a uniquely American art form—in this case the "invisible art" of music and the talented artists who created it. But to bring that story to life, we also needed to rely on the art of photography. We were fortunate to meet some equally talented photographers who allowed us to use their images, which were as powerful as the music in our film. The songwriter Harlan Howard defined a great country song as "three cords and the truth." Here are examples of the photographic equivalent: "one click and the truth."
